

On equality with cannibals

I'm standing at a traffic light. On the right is a Waymo—a driverless car, on the left is a Waymo, in front is a Waymo, and behind is a Waymo. Five cars. And only one of them is driven by a human.

Of all the inventions of humanity, nothing evokes such a sustained emotional excitement in me as robot taxis. As a licensed driver with over thirty years of experience driving tour buses and vans, I watch Waymo with the attention of an adoring lover. Not a single rule violation. Subtle and masterful adherence to them. The behavior of trained servants in a palace. Debussy's "Clair de Lune" performed by Presler. The quietest braking. Not a single unnecessary sound.

I run a stop sign. The Waymo, to my right, should have hit me. It brakes gently and silently at a safe distance. A human driver would not only have hit my car, but would have jumped out and cursed me in every language. The Waymo quietly and gallantly waited until I left the scene of the accident, which, thanks to it, did not happen.

Waymo cars have displaced taxis from the streets of San Francisco. They're gone. Uber is still around, but for how long? Waymo is much safer. My daughter sent me a photo of her nine-year-old son riding in it to school. I'm waiting outside the doctor's office. Across the street is a multi-story building with a complex courtyard filled with cars. A Waymo silently enters, swerving around a complex configuration of parked cars, and stops. Two girls, about 12 years old, carrying school backpacks, jump in, and the Waymo drives away.

For me, who remembers kerosene stoves and a wood-burning stove in the room, who in Zelenogorsk (an hour's drive from Leningrad) carried water from the pump to the second floor to wash diapers for a newborn, a trip to visit my sons on the other coast of the United States was like landing in a Martian reality.

One daughter-in-law, who doesn't speak a word of Russian (the other knows the word "hello"), reads my recently published Russian book, "Tatiana Menaker Tells," simply by pointing her mobile phone with ChatGPT at the page, which instantly translates everything into English. The second daughter-in-law (the wife of that baby from the dacha in Zelenogorsk) keeps an Aladdin's pitcher in the kitchen, with which she constantly communicates. "Google," she tells it, "remind me to add the meat in fifteen minutes," and sits down at the computer to answer work emails from the financial company. Fifteen minutes later, Google tells her it's time to add the meat. She gives it a new task and sits back down at the computer. The Google pitcher is a familiar face in the house. It gives orders and directs the household regarding cleaning, bathing the children, giving them medicine, and doing the laundry.

Then my daughter-in-law shows me a video of the baby climbing out of his crib at night and coming into their room. There's no need to enter while children are sleeping. The camera transmits every sound and movement of the baby to a phone and a computer and records it, allowing the parents to go about their business without worry.

Now I'll reveal the secret of why I'm writing this. I want to show a clash of civilizations. More precisely, a clash of civilization and, on the other hand, a mighty barbarism that threatens and has already arrived to destroy it. Nowhere is this more evident than in airports.

Americans are the most frequent flyer nation in the world. Globally, 80% of the population has never flown on a plane, and in the US, only 13% have. In 2019, Americans made nearly a billion air trips, or 6.7 air trips per person per year. Subtracting small children and elderly people, the number of flights per person shows that Americans fly more often than people in other countries take taxis.

After September 11th, every flight was subject to a monstrous tax in the form of hour-long searches, the discarding of shampoos and cosmetics, and billions in airport security fees. And most importantly, the time lost on each of the millions of flights. What is the value of a human hour according to the Marxist formula? So, a neurosurgeon, a high-tech specialist, a chemist, or a pharmacist spends two hours removing belts, hats, and shoes and undergoing security screening. How much does this cost them? How much does it cost society? Do you even realize that every flight for every person adds the cost of at least two stolen hours—that is, the most precious commodity in a developed civilization: time .

This mocking theft of billions, the degradation of the world's most advanced country (as well as other developed countries), and the slowdown in social development are being perpetrated by people from countries where 80% of the population has not only never flown on a plane, but continues to ride on donkeys. Watch the video from Gaza. Credit where it's due: only men and boys ride on donkeys. Women walk behind them.

Why can't America or Israel deal with these donkey drivers screaming "Death to America! Death to Israel!" and their retarded child-killers? Alas, they lack the courage to admit to themselves who they're dealing with. After September 11, President Bush shamefully mumbled that (ha-ha) Islam is a religion of peace.

Unfortunately, the leading example of this behavior is set by American leftist Jews who love and pity the "Palestinians," urging us all to pet, feed, and give the "Palestinians" money, so that maybe they'll reconsider killing us, at least for a little while. In their love and pity for the bastards, the UJA – Jewish Federation of New York recently donated a million dollars to the residents of Gaza, pompously explaining it as a Jewish moral duty. The utterly delusional UJA – Jewish Federation strives to show that it cares for Palestinian Arabs just as much as it cares for Israelis, EQUALIZING (!) both in public perception.

Taking the opinion of the majority of American Jews (three-quarters of whom are left-wing) into account is the height of idiocy. They are the victims and perpetrators of galut cowardice, spoiled by generations of complete security and the absence of the bludgeoning anti-Semitism. Nothing paralyzes the mind like the fat of prosperity. All those patrons of liberal synagogue palaces in New York and Connecticut, who attacked Trump during his first term, calling him a racist for not wanting to allow jihadists from Somalia and Yemen into the United States, have now forgotten that it was they, American Jews, who brought in through HIAS and resettled the Syrian "refugees" who recently staged pro-Palestinian demonstrations and anti-Israel pogroms on the campuses of famous universities.

It was they, the liberal Jews, the Jewish communists, who turned universities into NO-GO ZONES for Jews. No one understands this better than me, who was arrested in 2002 for opposing Palestinians and the anti-Israel activism of Jewish communists from "Jewish Voice for Peace" on the campus of the University of San Francisco.

American Jews' mentality lags a generation behind reality. They still see Israel as a weak, struggling state in need of US aid, without understanding or sensing its military, moral, or economic strength. Moreover, unlike former Soviet Jews whose fathers entered Germany as officers, American Jews, even those who served in the army, didn't have letters in their pockets about their wives, children, and parents brutally murdered by the Germans in Ukraine and Belarus. My uncle had such a letter in his pocket, describing how his elderly father and relatives were crushed alive by tanks in Zhitomir.

Before entering Germany in 1943, the fathers of Soviet Jews passed through Ukraine, where they witnessed with their own eyes what the Germans and their collaborators did to their families. Therefore, most (there were exceptions) were not particularly distressed when they witnessed Russian soldiers raping German women.

American Jews, who spent a relatively short time at the front, never experienced the mass exultation of a monumental victory achieved at a monstrous cost and costing many years of life, the kind that makes a person fight to experience it again. This war and victory became part of our collective consciousness, which we, Soviet Jews, the children born to those who miraculously survived the war, carry within us.

Therefore, Soviet Jews know from their experience of defeating the Germans that it's best to negotiate peace with a defeated enemy. They don't understand all this fuss about warning the enemy in Gaza about the bombings, feeding its population, and supplying them with water, gas, and electricity. It's strange that the British and even the Americans demand this of the Jews. They themselves, when they bombed Berlin, Dresden, and Japan, didn't warn any German or Japanese civilians about the bombings and didn't feed them until after the complete surrender.

And here's a Jewish scumbag writing in the New York Times about "A Future Settlement of the Israeli-Palestinian Conflict Beyond Intimidation, Bigotry, and Cruelty." A Settlement? A classic scumbag from the Galut Judenrat. He still lives by the false ideology of egalitarianism, dragged from the French Revolution by the communists, and equates my grandchildren, who drive around San Francisco in driverless Waymo cars owned by the Jewish Google (Sergey Brin and Larry Page), with the children of downtrodden, illiterate women draped in black rags, who ride donkeys and will continue to look up those donkeys' asses for a long time to come, because Jews are taught to think and invent, while these are taught only to kill.

Defenders of American Jewry pounced on me, screaming that they fought just like the Soviets. Yes, only in 1943 were Americans still considering how to draft every fifth person into the army instead of every ninth, when the Soviet Union was drafting everyone, even 16-year-olds. And that war was across the ocean from the Americans, as far away as the war between Ukraine and Russia today, or Rwanda and the Congo. Their homes weren't bombed, and they weren't evacuated to Siberia and the Urals with their children under fire.

In Arizona in the 1980s, I met American Jews who had moved there during the war to avoid demobilization. Their calculations were correct. By the time they got there, the war was over. What did they know about it? The New York Times mentioned the Holocaust once, on page 19. The Polish righteous Jan Karski, in a heroic attempt to spread information about the extermination of Jews in Poland, reached the White House and managed to get an audience with Felix Frankfurter, a Jewish Supreme Court justice. Frankfurter didn't believe him and sent him away empty-handed.

Only in April 1945, when Eisenhower brought two planeloads of photojournalists and filmmakers to liberated Buchenwald and showed all the footage to the United States, did American Jewry awaken. Their guilt over their indifference to those perishing in the Holocaust became the driving force behind the extortion and eventual ransom of their compatriots from the USSR.

But today, alas, left-wing American Jews have gone completely nuts again.

Do you know each other? Peter Beinart, an American self-hating Jew who hosts a pro-Palestinian, anti-Israeli channel. He hosted a national Zoom with Angela Davis! Yes, that same heroic Black communist, a student of the Jewish Marxist Hermann Marcuse, who came to the USSR in the 1970s to tell how bad life was for Black people in the US. She, poor girl, was sent to study philosophy in East Germany at the university's expense, sharing a two-room apartment for two, and then went to study in France. She recounted her tragic life to Leningrad students, who had never been allowed to travel abroad and lived in dorms with twenty people to a room.

Raised by extreme leftist Jews, this communist, associated with the Black Panthers who assassinated an American judge and convicted of hiding their weapons, later became a professor at the University of California, Irvine. Naturally, she couldn't resist joining the anti-Israel frenzy. She said she connects the struggle for Palestinian freedom with the struggles of other oppressed groups.

Who is sponsoring this Palestinian-communist coven? The left-wing Jewish magazine "Jewish Currents," whose board of directors includes my love, Masha Gessen, a former lesbian and now transgender, transitioning to a bearded man. But unlike her fluctuating sexuality, she stands steadfastly against Israel, declaring to everyone right and left that attacking Israel isn't anti-Semitic at all, and so let's all attack it together.

Even the countless Jewish millions needed to feed and appease the "suffering Palestinians" of Gaza, in my view, aren't the worst thing. The worst thing is the moral support provided by the American Judenrat to global anti-Semitism, which has finally earned the legitimate right to express its centuries-old hatred of Jews through the Palestinian abscess in an open, legalized, and loudly proclaimed hatred of Israel. How wonderful it is for them now, that they will finally be freed from the guilt complex for the behavior of their parents and grandparents, a guilt complex imposed by all sorts of "Schindler's Lists" and the flood of post-war information about the epic nightmare of the Holocaust. After all, which of their ancestors didn't have Jewish blood on their hands? The French? Not to mention Eastern Europe—it's awash in Jewish blood.

With the American Judenrat, which, alas, represents the majority of left-wing Jews (about 75% voted for Obama and Biden), it's simple. Even if they attend synagogue, which has long been simply a social club condoning sodomy and promoting paganism (from the cult of Obama to the legalization of drugs), their real faith is the communist heresy. They are "meshumeds," converts to this heresy of communism, along with all the modern currents of progressivism and vokism. Their creed is "Egalité." From "Liberté, Égalité, Fraternité"—the holy trinity of French socialism.

And in this Egalite—equality—they equate cannibalistic tribes, often without their own written language, with people who have read the Bible for hundreds of years and lived by it. For the sake of this shameful equality with cannibals, they are ready to trample, and are already trampling, Judeo-Christian civilization along with them.

The reasons for their hallucinations about cannibals are clear. They all come from the European galut, where in the 19th century, Jews were considered second-class citizens, and therefore the struggle for equality was a natural and sacred cause for them.

The Jews of Russia finally achieved temporary equality with the Russian lumpenproletariat, whom they had helped bring to power. We all know how it ended. They got a loud slap in the face, and when the opportunity arose, they immediately fled the camp paradise of equality, socialism, and labor into the damned inequality of capitalism.

American Jews, in their hallucinatory delirium, stubbornly follow the same false path, dreaming of equality with cannibals. Their war to bring black slaves to power with affirmative action is a repetition of the mistake of Russian Jewry. Now they are handing the keys to New York, the most Jewish city in the world, to the communist Mamdani, who inherited his parents' hatred of Israel. And so, with the help of the left, he will become president. This will lead American Jews (and us along with them) to the destruction we miraculously avoided in Russia only because Stalin died on Purim Day in 1953.

Before diving into the quote from Pinchas Polonsky that summarizes everything said below, we need to recall the Russian philosopher Berdyaev.

He stated: "By nature, people are not equal; equality can only be achieved through violence, and this will always be a leveling off at the 'lower level'."

Alas, this is exactly what the American left-wing Jews are doing, forcibly dragging me, my children, my grandchildren and all of you to the level of murderers with donkeys.

From Pinchas Polonsky:

"One of the central tenets of the leftist paradigm that society must overcome is the desire to portray all nations as essentially identical ("after all, all normal people in all other nations want the same thing we want"), and that all cultures are supposedly fundamentally equal. NO.

Just as we compare different people based on their talents and achievements, we must compare different cultures and civilizations based on completely objective criteria and see the achievements of our own culture and civilization in comparison to others (and, of course, learn from others' achievements in those areas where they are superior to us).

This isn't arrogance—it's responsibility. Anyone who says "all cultures are equal" becomes irresponsible, and in doing so, contributes to the destruction of their own civilization."
